

INHABIT

Inhabit is a multi-functional community landmark that artists, makers and musicians can make their own. It is a space to meet, a space to share and a space to nurture. The pavilion acknowledges that the most important part of creating a special space is the people that occupy it and, as such, our pavilion acts as a blank canvas for the local community to take over.

Our design follows the industrial grain of the Harringay Warehouse District, deriving its material palette from those found around the site as a means of tackling gentrification through providing a structure that can be more easily adopted by the local community. The scheme takes design cues from the local vernacular, whether that the chimney of the old Maynards factory or the corrugated metal of the industrial sheds in order to produce a pavilion more in keeping with the setting.

1. A place to meet

2. A place to share

3. A place to nurture

